

Philosophical Chairs

Active listening, critical thinking, and respectful dialogue (even when we disagree about something) are learned skills. Everyone can learn them, and no one can perfect them without practice. Philosophical Chairs is designed to help us develop these skills while also learning about the opera.

You might find these statements challenging—and you might find it challenging to talk with someone who has a different answer from your own. That’s okay! Take your time with each statement, embrace uncertainty, and know that changing your mind when you learn new information is a sign of strength, not weakness. Before you begin your discussion, take some time to review the rules of engagement:

Be sure you understand the statement. If something is unclear, ask!

Face each other. Body language helps show that you’re listening carefully and respectfully.

Only one speaker at a time. Everyone will get their turn to speak.

Think before you speak. Be sure that what you’re going to say is what you really mean.

Summarize the previous person’s comments before adding your own.

Address ideas, not the person. Challenging ideas or statements is good only if we respect the individuality and inherent value of the person who expressed them.

Three before me. To make sure everyone’s voice is heard, you may not make another comment until three others have shared their thoughts.

The Statements

- All teenagers are naïve.
- You can’t help who you love.
- Games of the heart have no consequences.
- Your family’s opinion about your significant other is important.
- Marriage is a lifelong commitment.
- Material possessions have sentimental value.
- A family should only observe one religion.
- It is important to uphold your family’s honor.
- Your own honor and dignity are important to uphold.
- You have an obligation to look out for those you care for.
- Loving someone requires vulnerability and honesty.
- Self-sacrifice is an important part of any relationship.
- Promises must be kept.
- Love is blinding.
- It is better to have loved and lost than to have never loved at all.