

GIACOMO PUCCINI

TURANDOT

CONDUCTOR
Oksana Lyniv

PRODUCTION
Franco Zeffirelli

SET DESIGNER
Franco Zeffirelli

COSTUME DESIGNERS
Anna Anni
Dada Saligieri

LIGHTING DESIGNER
Gil Wechsler

CHOREOGRAPHER
Chiang Ching

REVIVAL STAGE DIRECTOR
J. Knighten Smit

MARIA MANETTI SHREM
GENERAL MANAGER
Peter Gelb

JEANETTE LERMAN-NEUBAUER
MUSIC DIRECTOR
Yannick Nézet-Séguin

Opera in three acts

Libretto by Giuseppe Adami and Renato Simoni, based on the dramatic fairy tale by Carlo Gozzi

Sunday, April 14, 2024
3:00–6:20PM

The production of Turandot was made possible by a generous gift from
Mrs. Donald D. Harrington

The revival of this production is made possible by a gift from C. Graham Berwind, III and The Joseph and Robert Cornell Memorial Foundation

The Met is grateful to C. Graham Berwind, III for sponsoring the refurbishment of the Turandot sets

Sunday matinee performances at the Met are sponsored by the Neubauer Family Foundation

Throughout the 2023–24 season, the Met continues to honor Ukraine and its brave citizens as they fight to defend their country and its cultural heritage.

The Metropolitan Opera

2023–24 SEASON

The 361st Metropolitan Opera performance of GIACOMO PUCCINI'S

TURANDOT

CONDUCTOR
Oksana Lyniv

TURANDOT
Christine Goerke*

CALÀF
Roberto Alagna

LIÙ
Gabriella Reyes*

TIMUR
Peixin Chen

PING Alexey Lavrov*

PANG
Tony Stevenson*

PONG
Andrew Stenson*

EMPEROR ALTOUM
Scott Scully

MANDARIN
Jeongcheol Cha

HANDMAIDENS
Anne Nonnemacher
Mary K. Hughes

THREE MASKS
Elliott Reiland
Ilia Pankratov
Amir Levy

EXECUTIONER
Arthur Lazalde

PRINCE OF PERSIA
Jonathan Burwell

TEMPTRASSES
Natalia Alonso
Laura Katherine
Kaufman
Réka Echerer
Katherine Hozier

Sunday, April 14, 2024, 3:00–6:20PM

Roberto Alagna as Calàf and Christine Goerke in the title role of Puccini's Turandot

C. Graham Berwind, III Chorus Master Donald Palumbo
Musical Preparation Derrick Inouye, Dan Saunders, and Miloš Repický

Assistant Stage Director Paula Suozzi

Stage Band Conductor Bradley Moore

Children's Chorus Director Anthony Piccolo

Italian Diction Coach Hemdi Kfir

Prompter Miloš Repický

Scenery, properties, and electrical props constructed and painted in Metropolitan Opera Shops and Totalinter, Rome
Bamboo from Bamboo & Rattan Works

Costumes constructed by Metropolitan Opera Costume Department and Totalinter, Rome

Headdresses executed by Gaelle Allen

Wigs and makeup constructed and executed by Metropolitan Opera Wig and Makeup Department

Costumes based on original designs by Anna Anni and Dada Saligeri for La Scala, Milan

The Met's Æolian-Skinner pipe organ used in this performance was renovated thanks to a Wyncote Foundation grant from Frederick R. Haas.

Turandot is performed by arrangement with B&H Music Publishing Inc. d/b/a Hendon Music, Sole Agent in the U.S., Canada, and Mexico for Casa Ricordi/Universal Music Publishing Ricordi S.R.L., publisher and copyright owner.

This performance is made possible in part by public funds from the New York State Council on the Arts.

Before the performance begins, please switch off cell phones and other electronic devices.

* Graduate of the Lindemann Young Artist Development Program

Met Titles

To activate, press the red button to the right of the screen in front of your seat and follow the instructions provided. To turn off the display, press the red button once again. If you have questions please ask an usher at intermission.

Visit metopera.org.

Synopsis

Act I

Peking, in the mythic past. Outside the Imperial Palace, a mandarin reads an edict to the crowd: Any prince seeking to marry Princess Turandot must answer three riddles. If he fails, he will die. The most recent suitor, the Prince of Persia, is to be executed at the moon's rising. Among the onlookers are the slave girl Liù, her aged master, and the young Calàf, who recognizes the old man as his long-lost father, Timur, vanquished King of Tartary. Only Liù has remained faithful to the king, and when Calàf asks her why, she replies that once, long ago, Calàf smiled at her. The mob cries for blood but greets the rising moon with a sudden fearful reverence. As the Prince of Persia goes to his death, the crowd calls upon the princess to spare him. Turandot appears in her palace and wordlessly orders the execution to proceed. Transfixed by the beauty of the unattainable princess, Calàf decides to win her, to the horror of Liù and Timur. The three ministers of state, Ping, Pang, and Pong, appear and also try to discourage him, but Calàf is unmoved. He reassures Liù, then strikes the gong that announces a new suitor.

Intermission (AT APPROXIMATELY 3:35PM)

Act II

Within their private apartments, Ping, Pang, and Pong lament Turandot's bloody reign, hoping that love will conquer her and restore peace. Their thoughts wander to their peaceful country homes, but the noise of the crowd gathering to witness the riddle challenge calls them back to reality.

In the royal throne room, the old emperor asks Calàf to reconsider, but the young man will not be dissuaded. Turandot arrives. She recounts the story of her beautiful ancestress Princess Lou-Ling, who was abducted and killed by a conquering prince. In revenge, Turandot has turned against men and determined that none shall ever possess her. Trumpets then herald the beginning of the riddles. Turandot poses her first question to Calàf: What is born each night and dies each dawn? "Hope," Calàf answers correctly. Turandot continues: What flickers red and warm like a flame, yet is not a flame? "Blood," Calàf replies after a moment's thought. Shaken, Turandot delivers the third riddle: What is like ice but burns, and if it accepts you as a slave, makes you a king? Tense silence prevails until Calàf victoriously cries "Turandot!" The crowd erupts in joy, and the princess vainly begs her father not to give her to the stranger. Hoping to win her love, Calàf offers Turandot a challenge of his own: If she can learn his name by dawn, he will forfeit his life.

Intermission (AT APPROXIMATELY 5:05PM)

Act III

At night in the Imperial Gardens, Calàf hears a proclamation: On pain of death, no one in Peking shall sleep until Turandot learns the stranger's name. Calàf is certain of his victory, but Ping, Pang, and Pong try to bribe him to leave the city. As the fearful mob threatens him to learn his name, soldiers drag in Liù and Timur. Calàf tries to convince the crowd that neither of them knows his secret. When Turandot appears, commanding Timur to speak, Liù replies that she alone knows the stranger's identity and will never reveal it. Soldiers torture her, but she remains silent. Impressed by her fortitude, Turandot asks what gives Liù the strength to resist. It is love, she replies. When the torture intensifies, Liù tells Turandot that she, too, will know the joys of love. Then the girl snatches a dagger and kills herself. The crowd forms a funeral procession, and Timur follows as they take away her body. Turandot remains alone to confront Calàf, who impetuously kisses her. Knowing emotion for the first time, Turandot weeps. Calàf, now sure of winning her, reveals his identity.

Once again before the emperor's throne, Turandot declares that she knows the stranger's name: It is Love.

Turandot on Demand

Looking for more Turandot? Check out Met Opera on Demand, our online streaming service, to enjoy outstanding performances from past Met seasons, including four stunning Live in HD transmissions, a classic telecast of Franco Zeffirelli's spectacular staging, and a radio broadcast from the Met's historic first season at Lincoln Center, starring Birgit Nilsson and Franco Corelli. Start your seven-day free trial and explore the full catalog of more than 850 complete performances at metoperaondemand.org.

Support for Met Opera on Demand is provided by the Ting Tsung and Wei Fong Chao Foundation and Dorothy and Charles H. Jenkins, Jr.

Giacomo Puccini

Turandot

Premiere: Teatro alla Scala, Milan, 1926

Puccini's final opera is a huge and melodious fairy tale set in a China of legend. It has its roots in various folk tales about a princess who tests the worthiness of her suitors by posing a series of riddles and has those who answer incorrectly killed. Puccini's art soars in this most unusual score, which features an astounding and innovative use of chorus and orchestra that stands with any achievement in opera. Yet for all this, Turandot is recognizably Puccini, bursting with the instantly appealing melodies that are at the core of his universal popularity. The unenviable task of completing Turandot's final scene upon Puccini's death fell to the composer Franco Alfano. Conductor Arturo Toscanini oversaw Alfano's contribution and led the world premiere. The opening night performance omitted the Alfano finale, with Toscanini ending the opera where Puccini had left the score when he died.

The Creators

Giacomo Puccini (1858–1924) was immensely popular in his own lifetime, and his mature works remain staples in the repertory of most of the world's opera companies. Franco Alfano (1875–1954) was recommended by Arturo Toscanini to complete Turandot based on the success of his 1921 opera La Leggenda di Sakùntala. His works are rarely performed today, though his Cyrano de Bergerac (1936) appeared at the Met as recently as 2017. The librettists for Turandot were the playwright and journalist Giuseppe Adami (1878–1946), who had previously worked with Puccini on Il Tabarro and La Rondine, and Renato Simoni (1875–1952), who had written libretti for other composers. The play Turandot (1762) by Venetian playwright Carlo Gozzi (1720–1806) served as the source material for their libretto. Gozzi wrote satirical fantasies and tragedies for the Venetian stage at a time of intense debate about the relative merits of realism and fantasy in dramatic art.

The Setting

Instead of the Chinese ministers Ping, Pang, and Pong, Gozzi's play used commedia dell'arte characters in their original form—they wandered from Italy to China, becoming members of the Imperial Court of Peking. Their comments satirized Venetian politics and mores of the times. Puccini and his librettists dispensed with any such relevance. The China of this opera, set in "legendary times," is a mythic realm viewed from the exoticizing perspective of 20th-century Europeans.

The Music

Drawing upon the innovative techniques being employed by a number of composers in the early decades of the 20th century, the opera's sprawling orchestration calls for a wide variety of instruments, including alto saxophones, celesta, bass xylophone, harps (originally designated to be muffled with pieces of paper between the strings), and an organ. Puccini uses the chorus to great effect, from the bloodthirsty rabble urging on the executioner in Act I to the sublime invocation to the moon immediately following. There are several genuine Chinese themes used in Turandot that are integrated into the score in a suave and brilliantly original manner. The big imperial anthem in Act II is based on a Chinese melody, but the orchestra plays harmonies derived from medieval European religious music, and the remarkable resulting sound is not specific to any single culture. The title character's commanding Act II aria, "In questa reggia," and her succeeding confrontation with Calàf create an effect of Wagnerian proportions while still remaining in a firmly Italian style. The opera also contains moments of sheer melodic beauty in Puccini's most lyrical vein, notably in Liù's plaintive aria from Act I, "Signore, ascolta," and the tenor's unforgettable hymn of triumph, "Nessun dorma," which opens Act III.

Met History

The Met gave the U.S. premiere of Turandot in 1926, shortly after the world premiere in Milan. Tullio Serafin conducted a cast featuring one of Puccini's favorite sopranos, Maria Jeritza, in the title role, paired with Giacomo Lauri-Volpi as Calàf. This impressive duo led most of the subsequent revivals through the 1929–30 season, after which the opera (which had been considered a stylistic departure for Puccini) disappeared from the Met stage for several decades. It returned with the legendary 1961 production designed by Cecil Beaton, featuring conductor Leopold Stokowski in his company debut and starring Birgit Nilsson, Franco Corelli, and Anna Moffo. The current production by Franco Zeffirelli had its premiere in 1987, starring Eva Marton, Plácido Domingo, and Leona Mitchell, conducted by James Levine. Other notable artists who have since taken on the leading roles include Gwyneth Jones, Jane Eaglen, Maria Guleghina, Nina Stemme, and Christine Goerke (Turandot); Aprile Millo, Teresa Stratas, Ruth Ann Swenson, Angela Gheorghiu, Anita Hartig, and Ermonela Jaho (Liù); and Luciano Pavarotti, Johan Botha, Salvatore Licitra, and Marcello Giordani (Calàf).

Program Note

With his death on November 29, 1924, Giacomo Puccini not only left his latest and most ambitious project unfinished but also left the world without a clear successor to carry on the grand tradition of Italian opera—a tradition that extended all the way back to the art form's genesis in Renaissance Florence. But while Turandot can be considered “the last great Italian opera,” this designation fails to account for how much of the work isn't Italian. From its setting to its plot and, most significantly, much of its music, Turandot draws on other cultures—as Puccini had done throughout much of his career—and represents a distinct evolution from the preceding three centuries of Italian opera. Yet it is in no way authentically Chinese either. A Western projection of the East, it is rife with contradictions, distortions, and racial stereotypes—and yet is also one of the most exhilarating and impressive works ever to take the operatic stage.

Not long after the high-profile world premiere of Il Trittico at the Met in 1918, Puccini was already searching for material for his next opera. At first, he landed on Cristoforo Sly by Gioacchino Forzano, who had provided the libretti for Suor Angelica and Gianni Schicchi, but eventually abandoned the idea (though Sly would later be set by Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari). Then, critic, writer, and librettist Renato Simoni slipped him a copy of Carlo Gozzi's Turandot. Premiered in Venice in 1762, the play was inspired by an episode from François Pétis de la Croix's collection of Persian fairy tales, Les Mille et un Jours, and concerned a ruthless Chinese princess who sets a fatal challenge to any would-be suitor: In order to win her hand, he must correctly answer three riddles, but if he fails, he will forfeit his head. With his penchant for exotic subjects, Puccini's interest was piqued.

Depicting distant lands and peoples was already a centuries-old musical tradition by the time that Puccini considered bringing mythical China to the stage. From Mozart's Die Entführung aus dem Serail, with its percussion-heavy vision of a Turkish harem, to the Gypsies of Bizet's Carmen, Verdi's faux ancient Egypt in Aida, and Debussy's “Pagodes,” which took inspiration from Indonesian gamelan music, foreign sound worlds had long exerted a fascination on Western composers. Puccini seems to have had a particular attraction—even obsession—with the Other, traveling as far as Buenos Aires, Cairo, and New York in search of fresh sources to set. After the breakout success of his 1893 Manon Lescaut, he even briefly toyed with the idea of composing an opera about the life of Buddha that would incorporate a collection of East Indian melodies.

Of Puccini's 12 operas (when one considers the three components of Il Trittico separately) only three take place in his native Italy, while both Madama Butterfly and Turandot are set in the Far East and La Fanciulla del West plays out in the equally remote American West. And in the cases of the latter three, the settings are not the only markers of the works' foreignness; in crafting each opera, Puccini steeped himself in the music of each locale and incorporated existing melodies into the scores. For Butterfly, he even consulted with native Japanese speakers, including actress Sada Jacco, to gain a better sense of the timbre and range of their natural speaking voices.

It's no surprise then that Puccini gravitated toward Turandot, and he pressed his librettists—Giuseppe Adami, who outlined the dramatic structure, and Simoni, who furnished the poetic verses—to create a text that was authentically Chinese. He requested numerous changes to Gozzi's play, asking them to “find a Chinese element to enrich the drama and relieve the artificiality of it” and to make use of what he called “Chinese syllables” and “assonances that would give it a Chinese flavor.”

This focus on “Chinese” sounds also extended to some of the characters' names. The stock commedia dell'arte types—Brighella, Truffaldino, Pantalone, etc.—that acted as visitors to the Chinese court in Gozzi became the ministers Ping, Pang, and Pong, while Puccini also introduced a new ancestress for Turandot, Lou-Ling. More drastically, he urged Adami and Simoni to refashion Gozzi's headstrong Tartar princess Adelma into Liù (another name of Puccini's invention), the meek but noble slave girl who could easily stand alongside the composer's other simultaneously vulnerable and dignified “little women”—Mimi, Cio-Cio-San, Lauretta, and others.

Even more than the libretto, though, Puccini sought a sense of authenticity in his musical characterization of legendary China. In August 1920, just months after Simoni first suggested Turandot, the composer famously paid a visit to Baron Edoardo Fassini-Camossi, a former diplomat in China, who owned a music box of genuine Chinese tunes. Three melodies from this music box ultimately found their way into the opera's score, while others came from phonograph recordings and Jules A. van Aalst's 1884 chronicle of Chinese music.

It was from Fassini's music box that Puccini discovered the folk song “Mo Li Hua,” or “Jasmine Flower,” which was already familiar to European ears and had been included in travel guides as early as the end of the 18th century. In his hands, “Mo Li Hua” became the main theme used to represent Princess Turandot, first intoned by an offstage children's choir in Act I before recurring many times throughout the opera in different guises and orchestrations. The music box also featured the traditional “Imperial Hymn,” which can be heard during the opera's throne-room scenes as the people hail Emperor Altoum and wish him 10,000 years of life.

In these two cases, the Chinese melodies appear with few alterations, but as prominent Puccini biographer Mosco Carner points out, more often the composer's incorporation of existing tunes takes the form of “freely varying certain exotic melodies ... using them as models in the invention of similarly constructed melodies, or ... lifting characteristic motives out of them in order to mold therefrom new melodic curves.” This occurs notably in the entrance of Ping, Pang, and Pong in Act I, as they attempt to dissuade Calàf from pursuing Turandot. Their opening melody (“Fermo! Che fai? T’arresta”) is drawn verbatim from another of the music box’s folk songs, but soon thereafter, Puccini weaves together bits and pieces of other authentic Chinese melodies as well as some of his own creation. According to Carner, “various motives become joined with one another in a kaleidoscopic way, [and] the whole passage ... creates the impression of an underived, logically developed idea.”

The result is rather unlike any of the composer’s previous compositions. Gone are the intimate dramas and relatable passions of everyday people. These are instead replaced with dazzling spectacle, archetypal protagonists, and musical passages clearly influenced by innovative contemporaries such as Debussy, Stravinsky, and Wagner. A glance into the orchestra pit reveals a robust percussion section, encompassing not only xylophones, glockenspiel, and drums but also bells, celesta, tambourine, Japanese tam-tam, and a Chinese gong. And Puccini includes a number of musical “sound effects” to further heighten the feeling of foreignness, such as offstage brass and organ, harps muted with paper inserted between their strings, and saxophones to accompany the Act I children’s choir.

It’s not that Turandot’s score bears none of the hallmarks of Puccini’s lushly romantic style. Liù, the most (possibly only) sympathetic character in the piece, pours her heart out in Act I’s “Signore, ascolta”—an adaption of the pentatonic-based song “Sian Chok” that, in Puccini’s handling, becomes far more Italianate than Chinese—as well as in a compelling pair of arias in Act III. Not to mention the opera’s most recognizable selection, Calàf’s heroic Act III aria, “Nessun dorma,” which has become an anthem of hope and resilience far beyond the confines of the opera house. But according to musicologist Harold Powers, this “Romantic-diatonic Puccinian norm,” is just one of four primary “colors” in Turandot, the others being Chinese, Middle Eastern, and Dissonance.

We must also consider the criticisms that Turandot—and Puccini’s appropriation, reconfiguration, and reharmonization of Chinese music—has received in recent years. As Ping-hui Liao, a professor of literary and critical studies at the University of California, San Diego, argues, despite the composer’s attempts at authenticity, “when the material is drawn from another culture, as in the case of Madama Butterfly or Turandot, it is integrated and ordered so that it becomes intelligible, controlled, and agreeable ... the melodies are so well integrated that they lose their own autonomy and become part of a larger whole. In distinguishing between East and West, [Puccini] makes the former subservient to the latter.” Or, as Carner wryly suggests, while the Chinese characters don “national musical costume throughout ... this costume may bear the trademark ‘Made in Italy.’” It shouldn’t be surprising then that many audience members of Chinese descent find it difficult to watch as their own heritage is co-opted, fetishized, or painted as savage, bloodthirsty, or backward.

The question then becomes how to appreciate Turandot—which features some of Puccini’s most ravishing melodies, scenes of truly remarkable musical and theatrical grandeur, and opportunities for the kind of showstopping vocal displays that lie at the core of the art form’s appeal—in a way that both celebrates its achievements and acknowledges the problems inherent in it. As we raise our collective consciousness of its faults, it is essential that, rather than shying away from the less-savory aspects of the opera, with each subsequent revival, audiences recognize and grapple with their implications. For only through awareness and conversation, which must increasingly expand to include a wider array of voices and points of view, can the world truly understand Turandot as the thrilling yet problematic masterpiece that it is.

—Christopher Browner

Christopher Browner is the Met’s Senior Editor.

ALSO ON STAGE

KEN HOWARD/MET OPERA

TERENCE BLANCHARD / LIBRETTO BY KASI LEMMONS

FIRE SHUT UP IN MY BONES

Hailed by The Washington Post as “a watershed moment for American opera,” Terence Blanchard’s powerful modern drama returns after playing to sold-out audiences in 2021. Bass-baritone Ryan Speedo Green headlines an electrifying production by James Robinson and Camille A. Brown, with Evan Rogister conducting the stirring, jazz-infused score.

APR 8, 12, 17, 20, 24, 27 mat MAY 2

Tickets from $25 | metopera.org

The Cast

Oksana Lyniv

CONDUCTOR (BRODY, UKRAINE)

THIS SEASON Turandot for her debut at the Met; Verdi's Requiem in Parma; Le Comte Ory, Manon Lescaut, Tosca, and Das Rheingold in Bologna; Der Fliegende Holländer at the Bayreuth Festival; and concerts with the Youth Symphony Orchestra of Ukraine, Orchestra del Teatro Comunale di Bologna, Korean National Orchestra, Toronto Symphony Orchestra, Boulez Ensemble, London Philharmonic Orchestra, Orchestre au Festival de Pâques de Colmar, Gothenburg Symphony Orchestra, City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, Israel Philharmonic Orchestra, and Orquesta Filarmónica de Santiago.

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS She became music director of the Teatro Comunale di Bologna in 2022 and served as chief conductor of the Graz Opera and the Graz Philharmonic between 2017 and 2020. She has led productions at the Bavarian State Opera, Staatsoper Berlin, Covent Garden, Paris Opera, and in Rome, Frankfurt, Barcelona, Vienna, and Stuttgart, and made appearances with the Munich Philharmonic, Vienna Symphony, Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra, Deutsches Symphonie-Orchester Berlin, Staatskapelle Berlin, Vienna Radio Symphony Orchestra, Bruckner Orchestra Linz, London's Philharmonia, and Orchestra Sinfonica di Milano, among many others. She is the founder and chief conductor of the Youth Symphony Orchestra of Ukraine.

Christine Goerke

SOPRANO (MEDFORD, NEW YORK)

THIS SEASON The title role of Turandot at the Met, Brünnhilde in Götterdämmerung in concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a recital with Berkeley's Cal Performances, and concerts at Detroit Opera, the Aspen Music Festival, and with the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, where she is an artist-in-residence.

MET APPEARANCES Since her 1995 debut in the Ensemble of John Corigliano's The Ghosts of Versailles, she has sung more than 100 performances of 15 roles, including Ortrud in Lohengrin, Madame Lidoine in Dialogues des Carmélites, the title roles of Turandot and Elektra, Brünnhilde in the Ring cycle, and the Dyer's Wife in Die Frau ohne Schatten.

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS Recent performances include Elektra at the Paris Opera, Washington National Opera, and in concert in Tokyo; Amneris in Aida in concert at Detroit Opera; Marie in Wozzeck in concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra; and Madame Lidoine at Houston Grand Opera. She has also appeared at the Vienna State Opera, Covent Garden, Canadian Opera Company, Edinburgh International Festival, Lyric Opera of Chicago, and San Francisco Opera, among others. Since 2021, she has served as associate artistic director of Detroit Opera. She is a graduate of the Met's Lindemann Young Artist Development Program.

ALSO ON STAGE

ZENITH RICHARDS / MET OPERA

JOHN ADAMS

EL NIÑO

METROPOLITAN OPERA PREMIERE

Eminent American composer John Adams returns to the Met with his acclaimed opera-oratorio, an extraordinarily dramatic retelling of the Nativity story that incorporates sacred and secular texts from biblical times to the present day. Marin Alsop conducts Lileana Blain-Cruz's vivid new production, which stars soprano Julia Bullock, mezzo-sopranos J'Nai Bridges and Daniela Mack, and bass-baritone Davóne Tines.

APR 23, 27 MAY 1, 4 mat, 8, 11, 17

Tickets from $25 | metopera.org

Gabriella Reyes

SOPRANO (MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT)

THIS SEASON Liù in Turandot and Rosalba in Florenzia en el Amazonas at the Met, Nedda in Pagliacci at Lyric Opera of Kansas City, Mimì in La Bohème at the Atlanta Opera, and Marzelline in Fidelio with the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

MET APPEARANCES Musetta in La Bohème, Liù, the First Lady in The Magic Flute, Nella in Gianni Schicchi, and the Priestess in Aida (debut, 2018).

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS Recent performances include Mimì at Washington National Opera and with the Glyndebourne Festival, Margarita Xirgu in Osvaldo Golijov's Ainadamar at Detroit Opera, Musetta in Dresden, Rosalba at Lyric Opera of Chicago, and Cio-Cio-San in Marina Abramović's 7 Deaths of Maria Callas and the Priestess at the Paris Opera. She has also sung Musetta at the Santa Fe Opera and with the Jacksonville Symphony; the soprano in Philip Glass's Hydrogen Jukebox, the title role of Tobias Picker's Emmeline, the Countess in Le Nozze di Figaro, Minskwoman in Jonathan Dove's Flight, and a Greek Woman and a Priestess in Iphigénie en Tauride with Boston University's Opera Institute; and the Princess in Montsalvatge's El Gato con Botas with OperaHub. She is a graduate of the Met's Lindemann Young Artist Development Program.

Roberto Alagna

TENOR (CLICHY-SOUS-BOIS, FRANCE)

THIS SEASON Caláf in Turandot at the Met, Turiddu in Cavalleria Rusticana at Covent Garden, Cavaradossi in Tosca in Wrocław and in concert in Orange, Maurizio in Adriana Lecouvreur in Barcelona, Caláf and a recital at La Scala, and concerts in Vienna, Paris, and Geneva.

MET APPEARANCES Since his 1996 debut as Rodolfo in La Bohème, he has sung more than 150 performances of 17 roles, including Cavaradossi, Don José in Carmen, Samson in Samson et Dalila, Turiddu, Canio in Pagliacci, the title role of Cyrano de Bergerac, Pinkerton in Madama Butterfly, and Chevalier des Grieux in Manon Lescaut.

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS Recent performance include Pinkerton, Cavaradossi, and Don José in Verona; Cavaradossi in Barcelona; Loris Ipanoff in Fedora at La Scala; Canio at Covent Garden; the title role of Don Carlo in Łódź; and the title role of Lohengrin at Staatsoper Berlin. He has also sung Pinkerton at Staatsoper Berlin; Samson in Orange; Turiddu and Canio in Verona, Barcelona, and at the Deutsche Oper Berlin; Cavaradossi, Canio, Pinkerton, and Caláf at the Vienna State Opera; Pinkerton at the Bavarian State Opera; Don Carlo and Don José at the Paris Opera; and the title role of Andrea Chénier at Covent Garden.

Peixin Chen

BASS (HULUNBUIR, CHINA)

THIS SEASON Timur in Turandot and the Bonze in Madama Butterfly at the Met, the Commendatore in Don Giovanni at LA Opera, Sparafucile in Rigoletto in Madrid, Fafner in Das Rheingold with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, Timur at Washington National Opera, Verdi's Requiem with the Los Angeles Master Chorale, and the General in The Gambler at the Salzburg Festival.

MET APPEARANCES Sarastro in The Magic Flute (debut, 2019) and Masetto in Don Giovanni.

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS Recent performances include Fasolt in Das Rheingold at Seattle Opera and the Dallas Opera; Dr. Bartolo in Il Barbiere di Siviglia, the Bonze, and the King in Aida at Cincinnati Opera; Colline in La Bohème at Washington National Opera; the Monk in Don Carlos at Lyric Opera of Chicago; the King at LA Opera; and Timur at Houston Grand Opera. He has also sung Don Basilio in Il Barbiere di Siviglia at San Diego Opera, Sarastro in Die Zauberflöte at Palm Beach Opera, Ramfis in Aida and Oroveso in Norma at Houston Grand Opera, the Bonze at Portland Opera, Alaska Joe in Aufstieg und Fall der Stadt Mahagonny at the Festival d'Aix-en-Provence, and Colline at Opera Philadelphia.