Synopsis

Act I

1931, Lansing, Michigan. At the home of Reverend Earl Little and his wife, Louise, a meeting is taking place of the local chapter of Marcus Garvey's Universal Negro Improvement Association, and Rev. Little is late. Louise has been tense all day, and members of the meeting are concerned about active white supremacist groups terrorizing local people. Louise remembers past attacks that haunt her. A policeman arrives to say that Rev. Little was killed in a streetcar accident. The neighbors ponder what may have really happened, and Louise becomes distraught, sings to herself, and soon becomes unreachable. A social worker comes to the home sometime later and declares the Little children to be wards of the state. Malcolm tries to reach his mother, who does not react to him. She is hospitalized. His older half-sister appears to take him to her home in Boston.

About 1940, Boston. Still very much a country boy, Malcolm is introduced to Ella's middle-class Black Boston and, through his discovery of the music there, finds himself in the local after-hours life, with his guide, Street. But as a young adult, he gets involved with some people who rob a wealthy home, and he is arrested.

In an interrogation room, Malcolm reveals the anger over the troubles that have long plagued people like him.

Intermission (AT APPROXIMATELY 8:30PM)

Act II

1946–48. Malcolm broods in jail when his brother Reginald comes to visit. Reginald tells him about Elijah Muhammad, leader of the Nation of Islam, whose teachings he thinks will help his brother. Malcolm begins to study the Nation's teachings and read many books. He becomes a serious and more hopeful man. Malcolm X is born.

1952. The jail recedes as Malcolm hears and then sees Elijah. They come face to face. Elijah embraces Malcolm like a son. He tells him that he has much to learn to spread Allah's word and sends him out to start temples. He is an electrifying speaker.

1954–63. Malcolm begins his ministry, helping to found temples in Boston, Philadelphia, Springfield, Hartford, Atlanta, and New York. This scene spans several years in telescopic fashion. The period includes some of the heights of the civil rights era and closes with the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. Malcolm is seen speaking on various Harlem street corners as time passes. Malcolm warms to his task when speaking before more and more exuberant crowds and decries some of the peaceful protests in the South as he defines his own political position.

He leads an anthem declaring “We are a nation.” At the end, a reporter asks him about Kennedy’s death, and Malcolm makes a remark lacking in sensitivity to the nation’s mourning. Elijah is enraged.

Malcolm and Betty briefly discuss his upcoming meeting with Elijah. They express the hope that their children will be free to dream without fear.

Act III

1963. Malcolm is called to see Elijah, who is both disturbed that this spokesman for the Nation may have put the organization in jeopardy and that he may have become too powerful. Other Muslims disparage him as he comes to the meeting. The Nation is splintering into vying factions. Elijah silences Malcolm for three months, and Malcolm consents to the will of his leader.

He visits with his family, disheartened by the turmoil dividing his community and reporters hounding his every step. Betty hands him a ticket and tells him to go to Mecca to spend time alone and find his way. He decides to simply trust in Allah and ask for His help.

Malcolm is in Mecca, dressed in the simple cloths of a hajji and awaiting word as to whether he will be permitted in as a convert and not a man born in Islam. The call to morning prayer sounds, and people there begin to go through the traditional motions of prayer, which are new to him. He watches, imitates the others, and tries to learn the orthodox ritual. He has a larger vision of people across the world united together in faith, rather than by a single ideology.

1964–65. Just before he returns to Harlem, a riot breaks out there. He returns, now a changed man but outwardly the same. He is greeted by reporters, who question him about the rioting.

Later, he delivers a speech before his own newly formed group, the Organization of Afro-American Unity. He tells his supporters what he has learned in Africa—that they are a part of a larger movement against colonialism and racism. He is warned of death threats. He is not concerned with the fear so evident around him.

He arrives to give a speech at the Audubon Ballroom in Harlem. After greeting his audience, he is gunned down.

X: The Life and Times of Malcolm X

Premiere: New York City Opera, 1986

Anthony Davis's first opera, X: The Life and Times of Malcolm X dramatizes 12 episodes from the life of the civil rights icon and explores their historical and socio-political contexts. But rather than explain, let alone beatify, its subject, the work is primarily focused on his personal transformation. Each act follows a different era in the protagonist's reimagining of himself: from Malcolm Little to Detroit Red to Malcolm X to el-Hajj Malik el-Shabazz. It is also the journey of his audience and how they have perceived him, from victim of poverty to leader-agitator to martyr. The lack of easy answers and explanations about and for this man's life and work is key to his subversiveness and continuing fascination. It is also central to the opera: Neither the music nor the libretto seeks to console nor superficially inspire, but always to engage and intrigue.

The Creators

Anthony Davis (b. 1951) is an acclaimed improvisational jazz pianist, composer, and educator whose work draws upon several global musical traditions. He has composed for solo instruments, orchestras, and the stage (for instance, incidental music for Angels in America in 1993) but is best known for his operas, including Amistad (1997, revised in 2008), Wakonda's Dream (2007), and The Central Park Five (2019), which earned him the Pulitzer Prize in Music. The composer's brother Christopher Davis (b. 1953) crafted the story for the opera, while their cousin, the poet, author, and journalist Thulani Davis (b. 1949), wrote the libretto. In addition to X, she also collaborated with the composer on Amistad and was the first woman to earn a Grammy Award for liner notes, winning in 1993 for her work on Aretha Franklin's Queen of Soul: The Atlantic Recordings.

The Setting

The opera presents 12 vignettes from the life of Malcolm X, from youth to his death: abject poverty in Depression-era Lansing to adolescence in Boston to Mecca (the site of his pivotal hajj, the traditional Muslim pilgrimage), as well as a number of places in New York City, including a mosque, the streets of Harlem, and, finally, the site of his assassination in 1965, the Audubon Ballroom at Broadway and West 165th Street.

The Music

The score for this biographical drama is not unlike its central figure: complex, challenging, and undeniably compelling. Davis cites a vast range of inspirations, prominent among which are Wagner, Berg, Indonesian gamelan, South Indian drums, African dance rhythms, Black dance music, and music that Malcolm X cited as integral to his life and vision. These influences function both as structural models (for example, the dialogue between the material and spiritual worlds in the arc of Wagner's Parsifal, and the blazingly revolutionary spirit of avant-garde jazz of the 1950s and 1960s) and as sources of more literal allusion (Duke Ellington, Charles Mingus, and Cab Calloway in nightlife scenes, for example, and, somewhat more abstractly, John Coltrane's A Love Supreme in the "Allaho Akbar" chorus in Act II). In addition to traditionally composed scoring, there is also room for improvisation (conceived for Davis's octet, Episteme) as well as music written to sound improvised. Louise's grand Act I aria was conceived in Wagnerian structural terms, with rich orchestral underpinning that suggests a well of humanity even beyond the broad and stentorian vocal line, while Betty, sung by the same soprano who sings Louise, likewise has music that conveys subtextual nuance. The poetic, rhythmically conscious words of the libretto are always the departure point for the music, whether the savvy near-raps of Street, the edifying speech patterns of the idealistic Ella, or the insistent intonations of the religious Reginald. The real-life Malcolm X's speech patterns (often staccato in their sound) are very much at the center of his character's music, whether in transformed patterns for internal monologue or in public declamation, such as the rallies in Act II. The blur of distinction between internal and external becomes patent in the structure of the hajj scene in Mecca, with a vocal solo, a notable instrumental interlude, and a prominent choral element simultaneously depicting Malcolm's isolation and communion with his surroundings.

Met History

X: The Life and Times of Malcolm X has its Met premiere this season, with Kazem Abdullah conducting a new production by director Robert O'Hara. Will Liverman sings Malcolm, leading a cast that also features Leah Hawkins, Raehann Bryce-Davis, Victor Ryan Robertson, and Michael Sumuel in the principal roles.

A Note from the Composer

I am deeply thankful for the commitment of Peter Gelb and the Metropolitan Opera toward the presentation of X: The Life and Times of Malcolm X in this new incarnation as a musical work and in this astonishing production led by Robert O'Hara.

Over 35 years ago, X premiered at New York City Opera to a world that is very different from today, yet shockingly the same. Technology has changed how we present and create opera, yet the racial tensions and inequities still haunt us. Thulani wrote "You have your foot on me, always pressing!" in 1984, and yet the memory of George Floyd a mere three years ago reminds us what has not changed. With this in mind, we present a new vision of the opera for a new audience, a new generation who may not have a living memory of Malcolm X, yet his memory lives in us through music from jazz to hip hop, through our understanding of Black manhood, through the ongoing struggle.

When I created the music of X, I felt a sense of musical freedom that liberated me from the confines of genre or the musical boundaries that segregated music into oppressive categories. I tried to imagine a musical world where those categories and genres did not exist—in other words, where I could create a musical space that could draw on all of my musical resources. This does not mean ignoring the past or disengaging from the historical continuity of Black expression but to realize that music engages and references the past as means to envision the "new."

I had many guides in composing the music for the opera. From tenth grade in Italy reading Nietzsche's The Birth of Tragedy and Kierkegaard's Either/Or, I was introduced to the idea of opera, what opera could be. When Nietzsche described the binary of the Apollonian and Dionysian in Greek tragedy, I imagined an American opera that drew equally from the African diaspora and the European, where the immediacy of the improvised and subversive spirit of the blues met the form and structure of a post-tonal harmonic language of Berg and Stravinsky. In creating the musical world of Boston, I could draw on what Malcolm would hear in the 1940s, from the Lionel Hampton Orchestra with a young Charles Mingus on bass and Louis Jordan and his Tympany Five, to Billie Holiday, Fats Waller, Duke Ellington, and Billy Strayhorn. Later, when he joins the Nation of Islam, his conversion invokes the modal world of John Coltrane, Miles Davis, and McCoy Tyner. In setting words to music, I studied Billie Holiday to understand the elasticity of time, the polyrhythmic play that allows the voice to rise and swing to assert its independence. Lastly, it was my goal to create a "rhythmic drama" that compels you toward the inevitable. The rhythm of voices, the interplay of polyrhythms conveys the unsettling reality that we are always on that train that doesn't stop, that there are forces beyond us we can't control, yet we can find light in the heroic defiance of Malcolm X.
